SECTION A.

- (a) The greatest advancement in modern technology has been the invention of computers which are widely used today in industries, universities and every other sphere of our lives.
- (b) Computers are capable of doing extremely complicated work in all branches of learning. They can solve the most ~~complicated~~ complex mathematical problems or put thousands of unrelated facts together.
- (c) Computers are useful even in our everyday lives. For instance, they can provide information on the best way to prevent traffic jams.
- (d) The whole process by which machines can be used to work for us is called automation. Through automation, computers can be made to do more and more of our work, thus helping us enjoy more leisure.
- (e) Computers cannot lead independent lives or rule the world because they cannot think on their own. Though computers are capable of learning, from their mistakes and improving on their performance, they need detailed instructions from human beings to operate.

(f) Computers, as translating machines would enable people who do not share a common language to talk to each other without any difficulty as to read foreign publications.

(g) Sir Leon predicted that in the future, computers would be developed which would be small enough to carry in the pocket. Ordinary people would be able to use them to obtain useful information. They could be plugged into a national network and be used as radios.

(h) Computers can help people going on a holiday by informing them about weather conditions. Car drivers can be given alternative routes when there are traffic jams.

(2) 2.1

(a) A person becomes overconfident because of over assessment of his capabilities. Sometimes, people over assess their competence, leading to overconfidence and jump into situations that are beyond their control.

For example, Emperor Napoleon believed that there was nothing that was impossible for him in this world and invaded Russia in the winter of 1812. However, this overconfidence proved to be a great disaster.

(b) Overconfidence generally leads people into misadventures, endangering their chances in life. Overconfident people do not realise that any achievement is a result of two factors — one's personal planning and support from the external world. Overconfident people take into account only their planning and ignore external factors. Thus, they are unable to foresee future developments and have a great risk of failure. Napoleon's attack on Russia in 1812 is a good example of what can happen to overconfident people.

(c) To manage overconfidence, it is important for us to discuss any matter with other informed people ^{with an objective mind} and only then take a decision.

If it is proved that one was about to go on the wrong path, it is important for him to accept reality and say that he was wrong.

- (d) Modesty makes us a realist; we become a person who is cut down to size. Modest people become very cautious and assess the situation in hand before taking any action. They adopt a realistic approach.

Sir

Worried about the rising complaints of unfair means being used in examinations, I request you to publish this letter in your highly esteemed newspaper to generate awareness about this issue among the public. What is the purpose of writing an examination? Is it simply to obtain marks to get into a good college, get a good job and so on or is it for us to assess our own capabilities and get into a college or get a job that would suit our abilities. Well ~~it~~ in today's world, examinations have simply become a race that is run by all students — no one knows where he is heading or for what he is running, but simply wants to come first and is willing to do anything for it.

It is this attitude and mindset in most youngsters and even a few parents of today that has led to a rise in unfair means being used in examinations. Well, sometimes I even wonder if it is just laziness ^{and} ~~that~~ ~~the~~ ~~is~~ lack of preparation that results in students resorting to unfair means. Copying from others, bringing cheat with information to the exam room, etc. are all examples of malpractices that are prevalent in several schools, colleges and other institutions around the world. It is highly shocking to see how even parents aid students in copying in ^{certain} states in our country.

This clearly shows lack of moral values in our people.

So what can we do to combat this trend? Would simply increasing the number of invigilators or fixing cameras within exam rooms be sufficient? Certainly not. The change needs to come from those who write examinations. The very word examination means assessment. Examinations need to be treated as self assessment of one's own skills.

Students should be made to understand that there is ~~no~~ use of their getting into a famous college or get a good job if they don't really deserve it. Even if they receive good marks for the purpose of certification they will not be able to cope up with the kind of work they will have to do in their new job for they may not be prepared and trained adequately. Parents too, should allow their children study subjects they are really interested in. How would the world survive if ~~the~~ it were to be filled with only doctors and engineers?

I sincerely believe that to reduce unfair means being used in exams, children have to be taught from a very early age what their real purpose is. There needs to be an overall change in our perception of examinations. The one who scores ~~great~~ the highest marks is not really the greatest. Character matters more than anything in this world. It is my sincere request to all of today's parents to not pressurise their child to secure the highest marks in every subject. This change in attitude towards education ^{is} ~~that~~ certainly ~~to~~ vital for the true development of our country.

Thanking you,
Yours sincerely,
Aruna.

ans 4. Peter, Anjali, Apoorva, Rohan and Udit started on a 5 day trek to the peak of a mountain in the ~~the~~ Western Ghats of India. It was supposed to be a very hard journey but they were confident that they could reach the top as they had undergone ~~some~~ some training in mountaineering.

When they started the trek at the base of the hill, ~~they~~ ^{they} noticed that the clouds were turning dark. Yet, they decided to move on and ~~began their trek~~ ^{decided} to put up their tents only when it began to drizzle. Much to their surprise, there was no rain until evening. By this time, they had covered about one-sixth of their journey and found themselves in the middle of a dense forest. ~~Birds chirping~~ All of a sudden the chirping of birds increased and the roars and growls of animals from different parts of the forest could be heard. Peter looked up. They clouds had turned darker.

"There's certainly going to be a heavy downpour," he told the others and asked them to put up the tents.

They found ~~a~~ a small clearing in some distance and put up two tents. Peter, Rohan and Udit shared one tent while Anjali and Apoorva shared the other.

Soon it began to drizzle. The five youngsters had a small supper and decided to go to bed. They were to take turns in guarding their tents and Anjali ~~so~~ volunteered to keep guard first. The others agreed and soon began to doze off.

When Udit woke up at around 11:30 at night, he was shocked and filled with panic to find Anjali missing. He screamed, yelled and called out her name, but there was no response. Filled with all sorts of horrible possibilities as to what might have happened to her, he quickly awoke the others and told them that Anjali was missing. They decided to call Anjali's mobile number, only to find ^{her phone} ringing in their own tent. It was still raining and they didn't know what to do.

Finally, it was decided that Udit and Peter would go looking for Anjali while Apbawa and Rohan would stay together and guard the tent in case Anjali came back.

A little while after they had set off, they found a silver chain that looked like a woman's lying on the floor. Guessing that it would have possibly been Anjali's they collected it and moved forward in the same direction. ~~Soon~~

After some time, Peter thought he heard the sound of a woman crying. They rushed at once in the direction from where the sound was coming.

and found that the woman crying was not Anjali but someone else. Beside her lay the body of another young woman and to their shock, it was Anjali. They ran to the woman and asked her what had happened. She replied that ^{her name was Sanjana and that} she had come trekking a few days ago with a couple of her friends but had lost her way. She had no phone with her and had no means of contacting them and ~~had~~ had no idea where they were now. When it had begun raining heavily, a landslide had occurred and the force of the soil forced her to slide downwards. As she was sliding, she began screaming loudly hearing which Anjali had rushed to rescue her. Near the base of the hill when she had been completely covered in mud and silt, Anjali had dug out all the mud and have saved her life just in time. She had promised to take her to their tent and make sure she reaches home safely. They were trekking upwards when Anjali suddenly lost her balance, tripped, fell and hit her ~~her~~ head against a rock that was lying nearby. She had then become unconscious. Sanjana had tried all that she could ^{to awaken her} but it was in vain. She didn't know what more she could do and had then begun crying. Pooja and Udit told her not to worry and sprinkled some water from

(a) Decius Brutus was successful in taking ~~to~~ Caesar to the senate despite Calpurnia's efforts to prevent him because he appealed to Caesar's vanity and reinterpreted Calpurnia's dream to praise him. He told him that Caesar's statue pouring out blood and Romans bathing their hands in it signifies that Rome shall be enriched and revived because of Caesar. Romans would want their handkerchiefs to be stained by Caesar's blood and they would preserve it as an object of reverence, a memento or a badge of honour. He told him that Calpurnia had wrongly interpreted the dream. He ~~also~~ says that the senators ~~and~~ had decided to give the crown to him that day and might change their minds if he didn't come to the senate. (c) John did not want to partner Laura Hinkle at the Ouija Board party because the previous day a ghost named Helen had appeared in front of him and had asked him to exert his influence and ensure that his friends ~~and acquaintances~~ and all those around him do not use the Ouija. She had further said that they (the ghosts) were going on a strike and would not give him any more plots for his stories until he stopped the use of Ouija Boards. Thus, John was worried about what would happen to him if the ghosts found out that he, instead of stopping the Ouija Board party, was using one himself.

2) The mariners hung the dead albatross around the Ancient Mariner's neck so that it would forever remind him of the sin he had committed by shooting the albatross which had done them no wrong. The albatross had followed the mariner's ship for a very long time and rested on the ship at a fixed time every day. It had been the first sign of life when the sailors entered the land of mist and snow and the sailors had hailed it as a messenger of God. It had caused the ice to split and made a good south wind blow. The mariner, following some instinct within him, had shot the albatross with his crossbow. Now, when the weather ^{seemed to turn} supernatural, with the sky looking like hot copper with a bloody red sun that gave out intense heat because of which the ship came to a standstill and was unable to move, the sailors thought it was because of the sin committed by the Ancient Mariner. Thus when ocean waters seemed to dance like death fires and their throats were parched, as if suffocated by soot, the sailors hung the dead albatross around the Ancient Mariner's neck to remind him of his sin

9:00 pm.

Today was a very unusual day. When I had gone to my water trough to fill water in my pitcher, I noticed that there was a snake there before my. You might be surprised, but I must confess that I developed an instant liking towards the snake and was honoured that he had come to drink at my water trough. All the same, the voice of education in me said that he was a golden-brown snake and was poisonous and must be killed. But I did not want to do so. I wonder if it was just my perversity that I longed to talk to the snake. I had conflicting opinions within myself. Finally, when the snake had finished drinking and began to enter the dark hole through which it had come out, I was filled with a sort of protest, a sort of horror. I didn't like the feeling that the snake was going back into that dreadful black hole. Then, without any provocation, following the voice of education inside ~~my~~ me, I clumsily picked up a log and threw it at the snake. Well, I thought it did not hurt him, but that part of his body outside the hole convulsed in undignified haste and he retreated quickly into the hole. Oh! How I truly regret that ~~the~~ act of mine. It was so paltry, so mean of me to have indulged in such a lowly act. Why did I listen to those horrible voices of education within me? This is a sin I shall never be able to forgive myself for. I feel almost exactly the same way as the ancient mariner would have felt when he shot the albatross. How I wish the snake would come back! I missed such a wonderful opportunity I had today — a chance to interact with one of the lords of life, a king, a king in exile. I know I have to make amends for this sin I have committed. But how? I truly do not know.

9:00 pm

I am only praying and hoping that I never indulge myself in such a paltry, vulgar and mean act ever again.

11. Anne's relationship with her mother was never simple. She often felt that she and her mother were exact opposites of each other. Even when they weren't actually fighting with words, Anne says that there was always a silent battle going on between them. Anne, at first believed that the reason for all the tension and discord between them was because her mother never understood her feelings. She feels that her mother lacked real motherliness. She did not fit into the image of a perfect mother that Anne had in her mind, which was why she had never been able to call her Mumsie. She had failed to provide Anne the support she needed when she was going through phases of struggle. She would always scold her, ask her to be better behaved, ask her to talk less ~~and~~ but never really supported her. Anne ~~also~~ also does not like it when her mother treats her like a baby. She never looks up to mother and always says that she doesn't want to grow up to become like her.

Anne, however, later regrets having written very harshly about her mother. She feels that she ^(her mother) was possibly going through tough times too and had landed up in trouble many times because of her. She feels that she perhaps took her mother too seriously when she ~~was~~ scolded her and answered in a rude manner at which her mother would take offence. This way, Anne says that it was always unpleasantness and unhappiness rebounding over and over again. She wonders if things wouldn't have been ... All the same, Anne still feels that she can never confide in her mother and she probably does lack motherliness. Later Anne realises another reason why she wasn't happy about her mother. Anne remembers her mother telling her that she ~~thinks more of~~ treats Anne and Margot more as her friends than as her daughters. But Anne feels that a friend cannot simply take the place of a mother. She wants her mother to be a person she can look up to, who can guide her and can respect and understand her feelings. She wants her mother to be a person who does not take everything everyone says seriously, but wants her to ~~say~~ take what she says seriously. She finds these qualities lacking in her mother because of which there was always a lot of tension and discord between them.
